It is his opinion that they do not respond to ergument in behalf of economic queslegal controversy and that they simply care nothing about the character of administration they have. In all fairness isn't Dr. Pliot rather overestimating the amount of gray matter possessed by the totellectuals and upderestimating the amount possessed by the plain perple? Does anyone cutside the confines of a college campus maintain that there is any such disparity between the book-fed and the corn fed philosopher? Perhaps it may be used as evidence against us in proving Dr. Ellot's contention, but for the life of us we are not able to vis heat in a trotting rave for a fat pure ater Harding the owner of brewers fuse to commit themselves on probibition and the Volstead law, in the role of an apostle. Contrary to Dr. Eliot's contention the people are thinking a good deal about the need for economy in the offnirs of government; they are complications that might involve this country as a member of the league of nations, and the amount of taxes required of them has drawn their attention squarely to the question of sizing up the candidates and measuring their capacity for giving the country a sane administration. party mantle has fallen, as it has a way of doing every four years, without any special reason, we must conclude, as we look over the scores of men in both parties who might have served the identical purpose quite as well. And frankly we can not conceive of the people of Ohio rullving behind Gov. Cox, as suggested by Dr. Ellot, in an ecstacy of religion unless, perchance, some where between Dayton and Damascus be has seen a great light. If he did see if he omitted to make use of a splendid opportunity to exploit it as a religious issue, as Dr. Ellot suggests, preferring rather to say that it (the league) is the thing to

of the West After a careful reading of Dr. Elliot's article we are convinced that he is obviously so absorbed with the matification of the fer-me of nations that he not only favors scrapping both parties, which he admits serve a useful purpose in normal times but he makes the test of patriotism develon, not to one's own country, but to the peoples of the world. We are at a loss to discover the dividing line between ideas such as these promulgated by men who do nothing but think and the acts of those who never think.

There is an element regarded as dangerous, which would overthrow all governments and form a single government with all peoples as subjects. There is another slement that would maintain the existing nationals but would have the world guy-stred from a capitol at Geneva.

It has gotten to the point that when one speaks well of his own country he is charked with dieloyals to humanatis, and if he advecates.

Of course President Wilson made no such promise. It is outside his province to commit this country to maticism in Dr. Eliot's statement of any such program. The nearest apoutcome of the presidential election giving assurance to these nations was on May 31, 1939, when addressing the representatives of the smaller pressions that come from others sup.
